The above remark was audibly expressed hundreds of times every day last week by Ladies who visited our Establishment. The enormous crowds of Customers that thronged our stores, attracted by the overwhelming bargains which we offered, would certainly justify the remark. Our only regret is that hundreds upon hundreds went away unable to get waited on, so great was the Rush.

Never has such an assortment of Millinery been displayed in this country.

The reported receivership for the Wabash is amended by saying that "it may be necessary to throw the protection of the courts about the property."

We risk nothing in predicting that the streetcar monarchs are meditating a pleasant little surprise for their trusty and well-beloved servants, the people.

If the existing rate of mortality continues among Republican financial institutions it will not be so easy to raise campaign funds in the fall for the grand old party.

We respectfully request of Messrs. H. W. ITT, O'NEILL and other tariff reformers to let up on tariff bills and to listen to the testimony of one WALSH in the Star Route business.

A DISTINGUISHED service was rendered to the cause of morality yesterday in New York when 10,000 respectable citizens who wanted to see a boxing match went to see one. It was not a very elevated taste which brought them together, but there is nothing wrong in friendly sparring, and when people like to witness such a contest it is better, and in every way healthier, for them to be open and honest about it than it is to pay tribute to cant by concealing their preference.

COL. VALENTINE BAKER will never be restored to his rank in the British Army as long as Queen VICTORIA lives. We have no special admiration for Her Majesty, but we will do her the justice to say that she has never swerved in her attempt to enforce in English society a standard of moral purity which has been sadly needed. It is very probable that one reason why Queen VICTORIA refuses to help the Prince of WALES peculiarly is because he has refused to comply with her requirements in the matter of propriety.

The suppression of rumors is about as easy as the suppression of fog and mists, but in the case of the Wabash and its rumored receivership Mr. GOULD has only himself to blame for the wide-spreading of an opinion which cannot but be injurious to that property. When it was known that the Wabash was in bad shape, instead of reassuring the public by giving an exact statement of its business and condition, he preferred to conceal everything. It was only natural to infer that its condition was worse than was publicly supposed. It was another illustration of the folly of withholding legitimate information.

The testimony given to the Springer Committee by JOHN A. WALSH and E. S. HUTCHINSON, the foreman of one of the Star Route Grand Juries, is enough to make the blood of the average citizen boil with indignation. It paints BRADY's administration of post office affairs as a bold, brazen scheme of systematic bribery and robbery. It proves that the scoundrels had no fear of the law before their eyes because they had, as BRADY boasted to WALSH, "a corner on the Grand Jury." It proves that the prosecution in the hands of GEORGE BLISS was conducted from the beginning with a view of making the trials a mockery of justice and to secure the acquittal of the guilty, though there was an avalanche of evidence available to convict them. Such defeats of justice may some of these days make Washington the scene of an outbreak like that which was recently witnessed in Cincinnati.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Missouri Pacific Railroad case will incline people to believe that it was a pretty good thing for the interests of justice when Judge DILLON stepped down from the bench to become the open advocate of the corporations of New York. Judge DILLON may have been honest in confirming the sale under which GOULD obtained his title to that lucrative property, but, for a judge, he figured in a suspiciously large number of situations in which his opinions served his interests. This was shown in his appointment of his father-in-law to a lucrative receivership and his retention of his brother-in-law in a clerkship for which he was notoriously unfit. As the nephew of SIDNEY DILLON, who is identified in interest with GOULD, Judge DILLON should have been disengaged from hearing the case at all. The frequent connections established between the judiciary and corporate interests are going to make trouble for us if they continue.

Those who have noticed on the streets and about town to-day a number of evident strangers of unusually attractive personal appearance have had no difficulty in setting them down as visiting hotel men. It is almost as much a part of their profession to be good looking and to dress well as it is to make their fellow men happy by ministering to their comfort and welfare. While they are here it would be a good idea to try if we cannot get them to introduce hotel-keeping methods into public affairs. If our Government was as well managed as a modern hotel it would be a better Government. If we had hotel men in Congress instead of politicians there would be better legislation. If we had hotel men for lawyers there would be less litigation and quarreling. And when it comes down to municipal affairs can we think of such a thing as having our city Government run like a hotel? No. That would be asking too much; that is a wild, delirious dream. But when we learn by the evidence of fact that it is possible for a whole profession to be honest and yet prosperous, and to live in a perpetual condition of peace and good will to all the world, it should be a lesson to us that, if we cannot all be hotel men, we should strive to imitate them as far as possible, and thus hasten the coming of the golden age, when all the world will be as a well-kept hotel.

Isaac Van Waggoner.

The many friends of Judge Garrett S. Van Waggoner, who sympathize with him in recent bereavement, and, indeed, the whole people of St. Louis, who esteem him both in public and private life, will be glad to read the following notice of his brother, the late ex-Surrogate Isaac Van Waggoner, taken from the Paterson Daily Press:

As foreshadowed in the Press, last night, ex-Surrogate Isaac Van Waggoner died before the day had ended, death occurring at 9:40 o'clock last night. Since 2 o'clock in the afternoon he had been unconscious, and his death had been momentarily expected. Dr. Bibby remained in attendance, but it was evident that the disease had so far progressed that medical attendance could be of no avail. The scene at the death-bed was a most touching one. Surrounded by his family and more intimate friends, including some who had grown up with him, one of the ablest lawyers of Paterson ever produced breathed his last. Early in the evening a report was circulated in the city that Mr. Van Waggoner was dead, and there were many genuine expressions of sorrow; for no man was better liked or more loved in Paterson than he.

EDWARD KING writes from Paris: "It is said that a sculptor in Rome is making a statue of John C. Calhoun forty feet high. It is to be placed on a platform in a palmetto grove in Calhoun's native State. Is this art?"

JOE JEFFERSON, who has been barn-storming the New England towns, always managed when near the right sort of a brook to get a full day's trouting; but he caught more fish in the evening.

A Rare Chance for Millers!

That Seldom Occurs More Than Once in a Lifetime.

A New, Complete and Absolutely Perfect First-Class Flouring Mill in the right place, with railroad connections, that can be had considerably below its actual cost, is certainly a "rare chance." WE ARE AUTHORIZED TO SELL THE

"Atlantic Mills,"

In this city, a solid stone and brick structure, corner Main and Plum streets, at a low price. The ground extends the entire front on west side of Main street, 263 feet, from Plum to Poplar streets, by a depth on Plum of 117 feet, and on Poplar street of 165 feet. The Iron Mountain Railroad has a track on Main and on Poplar street, with switches and franchises to the mill. This immense structure has just been completed on the roller system of the most approved style. Present capacity, 800 barrels per day, with ample power and room for twice that quantity. Everything, to the smallest detail, is of the very best as to material and construction. Nothing superior in the Mississippi Valley.
